The logic was illogical enough to be logic at some level where reality and unreality try to shake hands.

But that wasn't happening today.

The Existential Adventures of Crazy Man and the Dog, Sidestepper

From Episode 54

When my daughter was a young child, I used to ask her who's opinion of her was the most important in the world. She would smile and say, "Yours." To which I replied, "No, try again." And she would give a list of family and friends until finally she would say, "Mine!"

And we would celebrate.

From Episode 56

As empires expand and age, their greatest threat comes from deep inside where once they drew their strength. In this place confidence turns to arrogance, generosity turns to greed and curiosity into complacency.

The shopping cart, Wheels, was thinking about these things at very deep levels when Crazy Man said, "Can you hear that?"
